the roof but did not great damage. The storm was by far the worst that ever visited this section of the country.

DETAILS OF GEORGE TRESCHER'S DEATH BY DROWNING IN OKLAHOMA

Milton Young Man Met Sad Fate
While on Health-Seeking Jaunt
Through Southwest.
George Trescher was born in the town of Milton, Rock county, state of Wisconsin, Oct. 18, 1886, and died in Oklahoma, June 12th. Sometime in February last he left his home in Wisconsin in company with his brother Frank, desiring to see something of the world and in the meantime hoping that such a change might invigorate his somewhat depleted health. In this he was not disappointed as the change of climate was to his advantage and he hoped soon to return to his parents and family in Wisconsin. But fate had devised otherwise. On the 12th of June it was planned by himself and brother and several others to take a lay-off for a few days and go a fishing. Arriving at the desired place it was proposed to take a bath, which several of the number proceeded to do. Mr. Trescher being among them.
The fact that he could not swim was not known to his companions. The result was that he soon got beyond his depth and sank, and strange as it might seem made no outcry nor, as stated by those on shore, rose again.
As soon as it was discovered that he had passed from sight strenuous efforts were made to locate the place where he was last seen and if possible rescue him. But before success came to them the spirit of the unfortunate young man had fled and no effort on the part of his friends was able to restore him to life. There was nothing left but to telegraph the sad intelligence to the father and mother. He leaves a father and mother, one sister and four brothers to mourn his loss.

REMNANTS OF PREHISTORIC EARTH WORKS IN THE CITY OF JANESVILLE

Story Of The 85-Foot "Tadpole" Effigy Scraped Off The Janesville Cement Post Company's Sand Hill This Spring--Signal And Burial Mounds--Indian Occupation Of Wisconsin.

Ever and anon Rising Mist the Dreamer awoke from fitful, feverish slumber to an appreciation of the unbridled fury of the storm. And sometimes, dismayed by the crash of riven trees, the demon shriek of the wind, and the screams of wild beasts which pierced, at intervals, the roar of the tempest, he almost forgot the agony of aching wounds, which gentle hands had dressed with the syptic powder of the puff-ball and stitched with the fibres of the basswood's inner bark. Now and then, through the chinks of the rude barricade at the cavern's mouth, he saw the wide bayon of the river ablaze with baleful light, and as he gazed across the gleaming expanse of water, the range of great hills to the eastward surrendered its outline to some monstrous, crouching, creeping thing—the very incarnation of that dreadful chaos which seemed to hold a whole world in its convulsive grasp. Since the first day he could remember when his fair-skinned mother, marveling at the strange moods and fancies of a mere boy, had named him after the impalpable fog bank that slowly lifted from the Mighty River, the Mist could not recall such another outpouring of the Great Spirit's wrath.

If the companion who shared his deer-skin blanket in the narrow refuge, heard she gave no sign, and remembering her ceaseless vigil and uncomplaining toil during the three days' flight, the wounded warrior rejoiced that she could sleep. Dawn-Flower, he called her, though he knew not her name nor the alien tongue she spoke. He knew only that she was very beautiful, this daughter of a king who had saved him from the sacrificial altar of the mysterious city three days' journey to the northward, and that for him she should always symbolize the wondrous wave-blossom which unfolds its beauty to the sun, after the night of darkness and despair is gone.

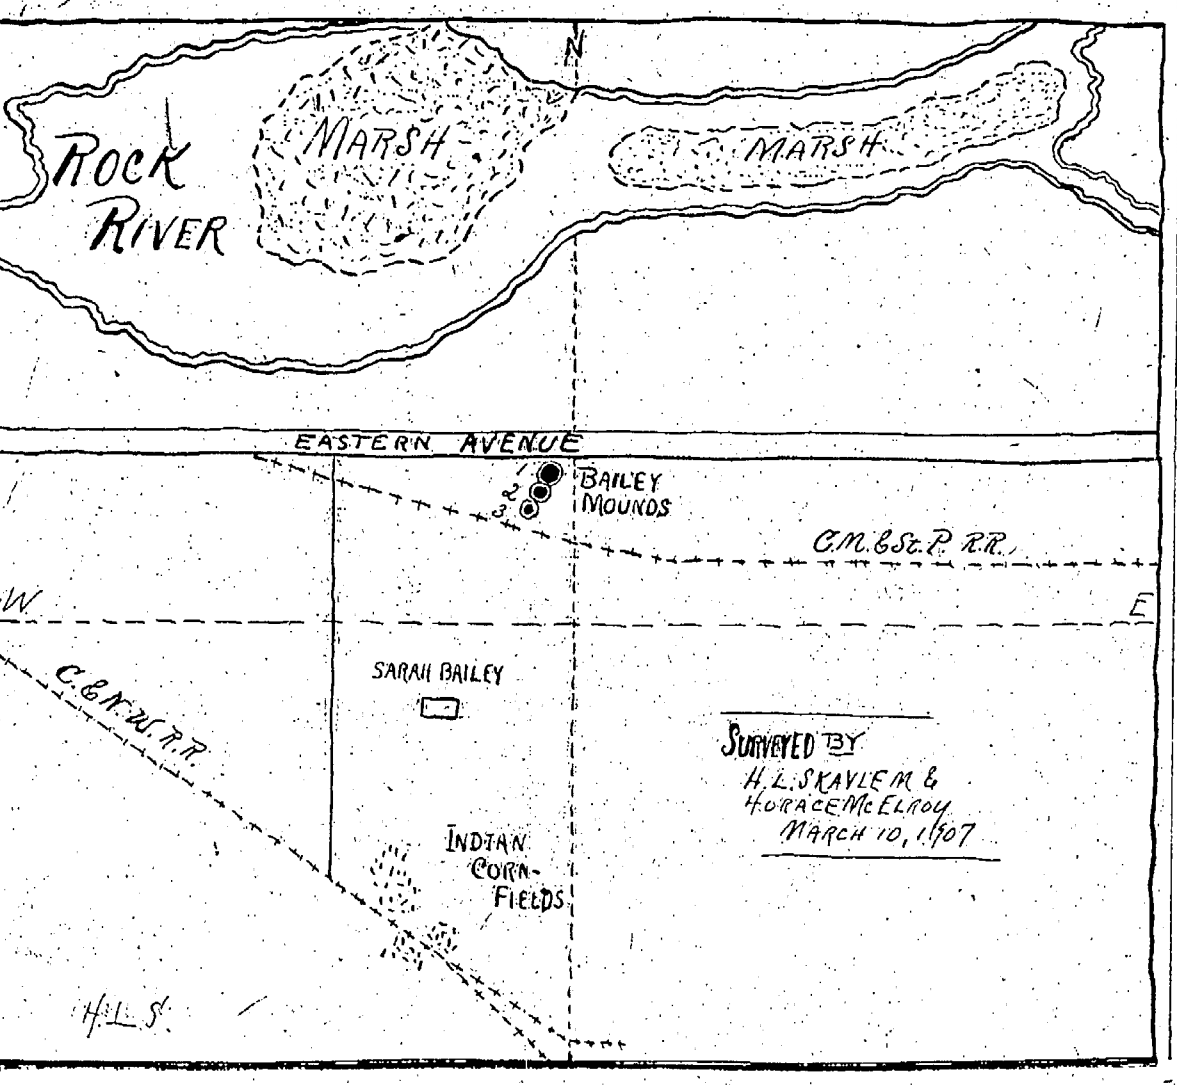

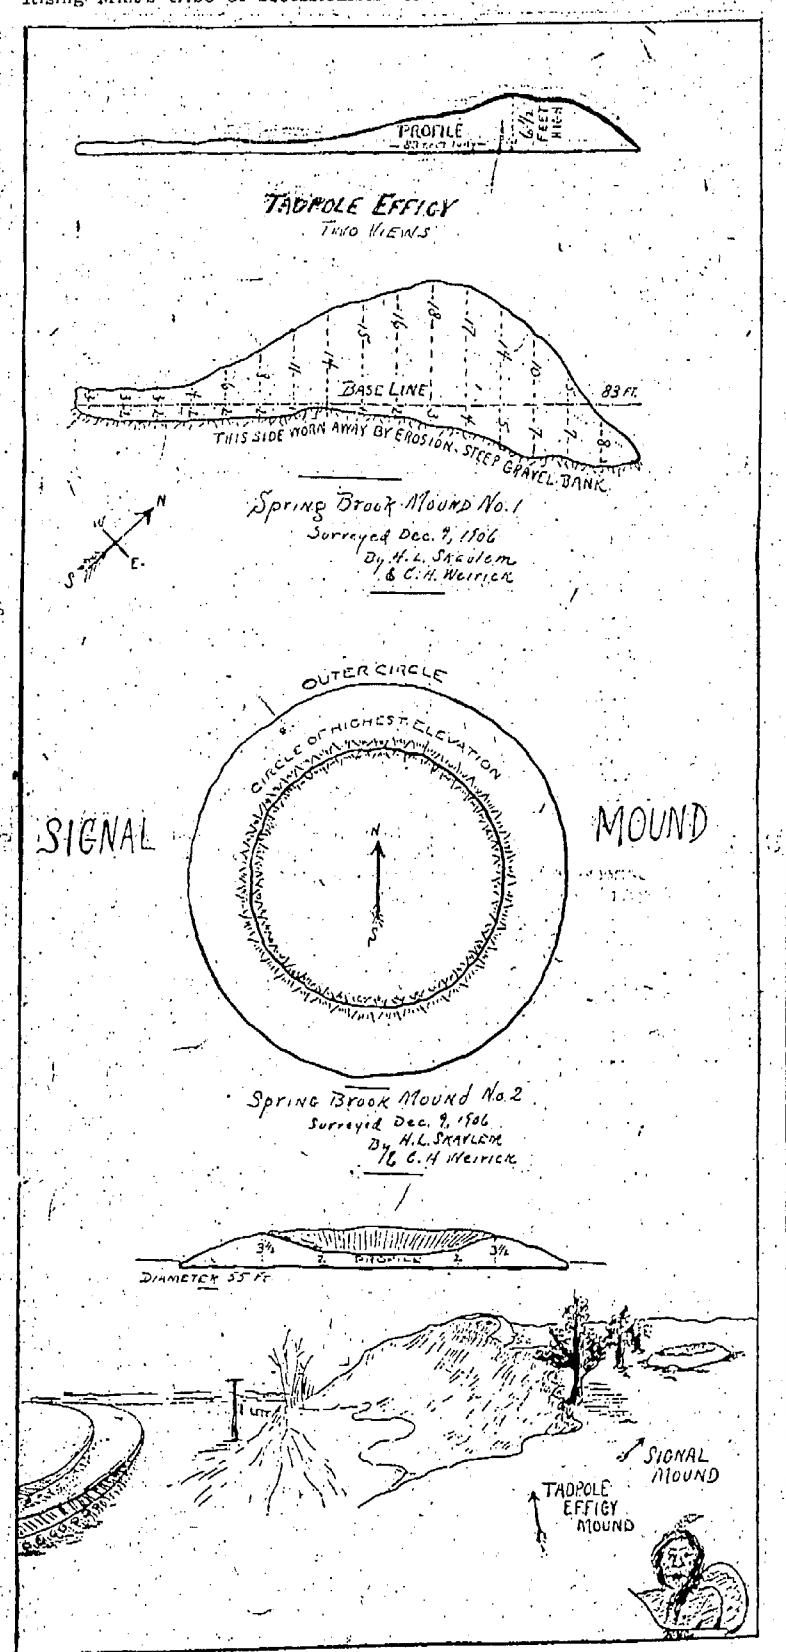

Hours later when the storm began to abate and the frogs sang again, the Mist sank into a troubled but lasting sleep. And the dream-trail, after many turns and windings, began to lead him through the same tumultuous scenes which latter days had crowded in upon his actual experience; the revolt against the mandate of Whirling Death, his father, to hunt the buffalo in the Grey Wolves' country west of the Great River, an uprising in which Fighting Eagle, White Heron, Crazy Elk, The Loon, and two score of the stripping braves had joined him; the expulsion from the village; the long, toilsome journey eastward; the sudden battle with the strange race of Fire Worshipers, theretofore known to him only through the story which old Sleepy Owl had painted on his wigwam door; his own capture and the flight of his companions; the days of feasting and music during which he had been treated as a royal guest, followed by other days of rigorous preparation for what he came at last to know was to be his final doom on the high altar between the four pyramids where the everlasting fires burned; the unexpected deliverance by the Dawn-Flower, whose gentle glances had rested on him from the beginning; the embarkation in her canoe, interrupted by discovery and the hoarse cries of rage from boatmen left without a single craft; the shower of arrows which had laid him low; Dawn-Flower's seizure of the paddle and the long, painful, happy glide down the river, till the moon faded, the skies began to redden in the east, and the lake where the birds swarmed amid the wild rice was reached. Unfolded as on a scroll: the day of hiding and the continued voyage by night; the second evening's shelter in the cove where the springs of grateful water flowed; the journey once more resumed, the outburst of the gathering storm, and finally the end of the journey—the chance discovery of the refuge in the Big Rock.

The sun was shining when he awoke and the Flower of the Dawn had brought him food and by excited signs and sounds was trying to convey a message. In response to her solicitations he made his way presently to the high bank to gaze with astonishment and wonder at sod strewn with myriads of hopping, sprawling, dying little creatures and the dead. Then, as with questioning eyes his guide raised her hands skyward, his superstitious soul understood and accepted her translation of the prodigy. And with acceptance came the vow that henceforth, should the women prove a good one, the frog and all its family should be his totem. Even as this resolution stirred him, there came from a cove of stunted oak beyond the marshy slough that ran away to the northward, the thrice-repeated call of the loon. A wild wave of joy swept over the Dreamer as he recognized in that mimicked bird-note the voice of old Wary-Bird's son and knew that reunion with his roving band and deliverance from the uncertainties and anxieties which beset him were at hand.

Rising Mist's tribe of secessionists from the ancient village on the Mighty River multiplied, and prospered in war—but chiefly in the arts of peace. They stalked the deer and cultivated little plots of ground in the flower-strewn prairie. But first of all the women labored six full moons, carrying black-earth in rude baskets of willow and building up a mammoth monument on the summit of the great hill which the Dreamer had seen lashing the sky with a tall of fire, during the never-to-be-forgotten storm. It was Dawn-Flower who furnished the design and superintended the rearing of the image, but the chieftain, who in all his observations of the animate world about him had come to see nothing more remarkable than the half-fish, half-creature-of-the-shore development of the sacred frog, had directed what its form should be. When, in after years, the long grasses grew on the effigy and waved in response to the lightest cap of wind, the Mist saw that his totem moved and lived and knew that it was good. And the tribe of Tadpoles grew to be a nation and flourished long after the intrepid Genesee navigator and his caravans weighed anchor in another hemisphere for the Pillars of Hercules, the Lost Island of the Seven Cities, and the unknown world, while the remnant of the impious Fire-Worshippers were driven from the land and the brick-walled city where they had practised their horrid rites and mysteries shot no more tongues of flame to the sky and came to be tenanted only by carrion birds and the skulking wolf.

Long after the Dreamer had dozed to the Silent Messenger the single feather which he wore in his scalp-lock, invaders came from the north to scatter his people to the four winds, and the foundations he had laid for pursuits higher than war were overturned and lost. From the recollections of silent captives even the memory of his good works faded.

The ruins of parapet and altar of Aztalan, the ancient city of the Fire Worshipers, still challenges the curious pilgrim who makes his tedious way to the banks of the Crawfish, three miles from Lake Mills. Fragments of the beautiful brown horizon knife which found its way to Rising Mist from the Wyandotte cave region in Indiana, were unearthed in November, 1902, by laborers at work upon a trench at the corner of Pearl and Elizabeth streets, this city, and are now in the Milwaukee museum. Time and bad boys have effaced whatever pictographs may have been left on the walls of the Big Rock cavern, but the cavern is still there. The remains of the tadpole effigy, however, were leveled early this spring by workmen engaged in "stripping" the surface of the hill for the Janesville Cement Post Co., and the black earth which the pious women of the Tadpole tribe carried up the toilsome path several centuries since, is putting the bloom upon the lily in local posy-beds.

SPRING BROOK MOUND NO. 1—THE TADPOLE EFFIGY—(From the notes made by H. L. Skavlem on Dec. 9, 1906)—This mound is located on the extreme edge of a very steep gravelly bluff, the latter being one of the highest headlands overlooking the Rock river in this locality. A broad, fertile bottom-land extends to the south and east, terminating in the distant bluffs of the higher lands of Rock Prairie. This is an effigy mound of the "Tadpole" or "Pollywog" type. Similar mounds have been located near the Adkinson and Knutson. Ancient erosion of the steep bluff on which this one is located has long ago carried away about one half of the mound. Dr. J. W. S. John remembers this mound sixty years ago and says that at that time much of it seemed to have slid down the steep bank. It measures now 85 feet in length; 6 1/2 feet in height at the highest point; and the greatest width of what remains is about 24 feet. The axis lies in a north by 30 degrees east direction, with the head, or larger part, to the northeast. The attenuated part is about as long as the main body with an elevation of about one foot and a width of five feet. The whole south side is cut out by erosion, as indicated in the diagram. A depression in the center of the highest part indicates a partial excavation.

SPRING BROOK MOUND NO. 2—THE SIGNAL MOUND—(From H. L. Skavlem's notes, Dec. 9, 1906)—This is a circular mound 85 feet in diameter and 7 1/2 feet high. It is located 80 paces due east of the "Tadpole" effigy, on the same bluff but back some 20 feet from the edge of the same. It is of the type commonly designated as "signal" or "council" mound. Excavations recently made have exposed cross-sections near the center, revealing several thin, irregular layers or veins of charcoal. The whole mound is built up from the surrounding surface soil, sandy loam. The top is saucer-shaped, being about 1 1/2 feet lower at the center than at the edges. (See diagram.) The greater portion of this interesting monument of prehistoric times was carted away last summer, the fine soil being used to fill in lots. A section (Continued on Page 7.)

SCOVILLE'S WORK SHOWING

Progress of Great Meetings Continues Without Any Cessation of Interest.

Dr. Scoville did not scold last night, neither did he roast or scold anyone and yet he spoke very plainly to the church members of this city relative to their duty at this opportune time. He began with the words of the late Cecil Rhodes, "So much today and so little time to do it." I have a right to expect the people of these four churches who have called me here to labor with their pastors to be present at each meeting of the series. It will not do much good to come one night and stay away two or three. Now, if

SECOND JURY WAS UNABLE TO AGREE

And Third Trial of the Assault Action Brought by Wilson Lane is Set For Wednesday.

After five hours of deliberation members of the jury trying the Alex. P. Russell assault and battery action reported at five o'clock yesterday afternoon that they could reach no agreement. Samuel Grundy and George A. Griffey were for conviction and J. Lemke, John Vilcox, Philip Sheridan, and J. Oliver Reese were for acquittal. The third trial of the case was set for next Wednesday, though some sort of a settlement is likely to be reached during the interim. The case has already cost the county a tidy sum and many believe that it would be the best for all concerned if the matter could be adjusted out of court.

MISCELLANEOUS "HAIR TONICS"

Most Hair Tonics Are Merely Scalp Irritants, of No Value. Most hair preparations are merely scalp irritants, mislabeled hair tonics. When hair is brittle, lustreless and begins to fall out, the dandruff germ is getting in its deadly work at the root, sapping the vitality. Since science discovered that dandruff is a germ disease there has been only one preparation put on the market that will actually destroy the dandruff germ, and that is Newbro's Herpicide. It quickly reduces scalp fever, destroys the germ, and the falling hair stops and the hair grows luxuriantly. Ask your druggist for Herpicide. It allays itching instantly and permits the hair to grow. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c. in stamps for sample to Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich.

To contradict certain talk and to put the consuming public in possession of the truth, we say in plain words that no one in this town can sell as good coffee as Arbuckles' Ariosa for as little money.

Misbranded and make-believe Mocha and Java, or coffee sold loose out of a bag or a bin, is not as good value for the money, nor can it be sold at as narrow profit, nor reach the consumer under as favorable conditions.

When you buy Arbuckles' Ariosa Coffee you get more than 16 net ozs. of straight, wholesome Brazilian coffee from the largest coffee firm in the world, with that firm's direct assurance that they are giving you the best coffee in the world for the money.

THE DUMA AND THE HAGUE

The dissolution of the Duma at St. Petersburg comes at a time when forty-seven different nations of the world are gathered together at The Hague in the interests of peace. The coincidence shows that, for the present, in one of the great countries of the world at least, government by parliament has proved itself impossible, while in one of the small countries an international parliament has entered upon its labors to determine unsettled issues among the nations of the world.

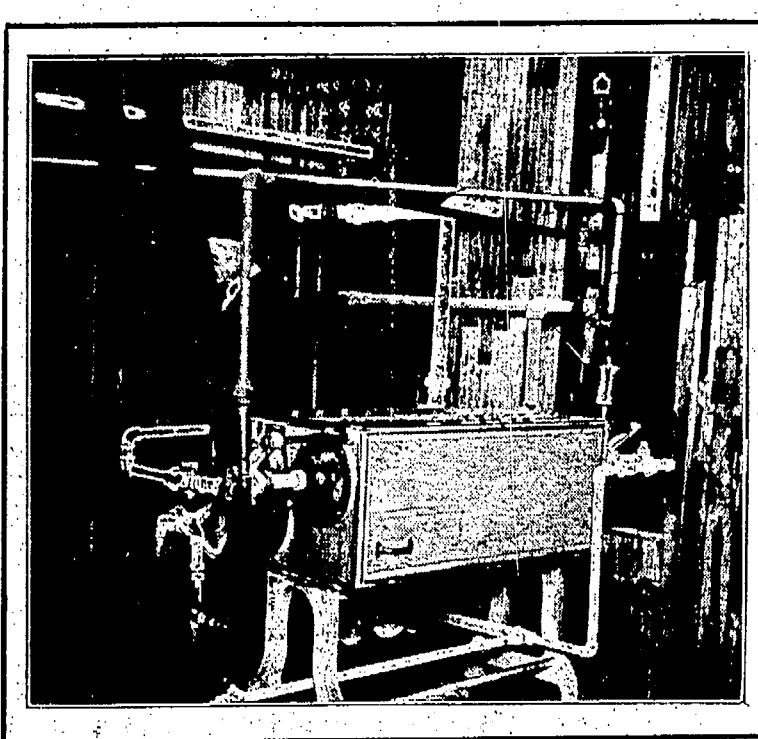

"The dissolution of the Duma is likely to be looked upon at best as reactionary," says the Wall Street Journal. The use of the military in the threatening form which preceded the dissolution partook more of the nature of a coup d'etat than of a peaceful adjournment. Along with dissolution came the extraordinary abridgment of representation which, from the British and the American points of view, seems to turn this great agency of government into a farce, and raise the question whether the Czar has really kept faith with his earlier pledges to his people. Yet this may have been rendered inevitable as an alternative of any representative government at all. Even tyranny is justifiable in the face of anarchy.

The effect of this step is as yet uncertain. If the lower house of the Russian parliament is to be looked upon as another instance of the Austro-Hungarian assembly, the financial world is not likely to take much alarm, because the presence of such a body is often more dangerous than its absence. Apparently radicalism, incapable of self-restraint, has succeeded in neutralizing the element of moderation in Russian political representation. It is this conservative element which the new election has apparently sought to save for parliamentary service.

Nevertheless, for the present at least, the act is not likely to strengthen the credit of Russia in the money markets of the world.

At The Hague as well as in the Duma reaction seems to be the watchword of all that Russia does. The selection of a Russian representative for the presidency of The Hague has afforded him occasion to voice a reactionary attitude on questions of limiting armaments. On this view Germany, Austria and Russia are united. Yet out of this may come good because of it promoting the purpose of The Hague to occupy itself with more practical phases of legislation, including the rights of property of neutrals at sea in war, the organization of machinery for conciliation, and the reference of disputes to arbitration which diplomacy may fail to settle.

In the question of the rights of property at sea Great Britain and western Europe generally have much at stake. It was a Russian source some years ago that proposed to make foodstuffs contraband in case of war, thus aiming a blow at the dependence of Great Britain upon her maritime supplies of grain. The United States is equally interested in settling this question in favor of Great Britain, and against what is understood to be the Russian view of the question. As long as these issues exist, the international horizon can never be considered as clear of clouds. The dismissal of the Duma and the speech of Nelidoff at The Hague do not really

The Creamery Package Company Is Looking For A Location to Manufacture This Freezer.

This continuous ice cream freezer, recently installed by the Shurtliff Company, is the new patent freezer manufactured at Ft. Atkinson by the Creamery Package Manufacturing Company. Mr. Shurtliff personally perfected this machine, and secured the first freezer manufactured by the company.

To those familiar with the old method of freezing ice cream this freezer is somewhat of a wonder. The advantages of this method of freezing over the old way are so many that it would be almost impossible to enumerate them.

The freezing with this machine at the Shurtliff plant is done entirely with cold brine, which passes through rapidly moving discs. The cream flows over the outside of these discs and as it is frozen it is carried through a spout into the "cold room," where it is caught in the cans in which it is shipped. This does away with all handling with scoop or dipper and is a great step toward absolute cleanliness.

From the cold room the cans are carried into the refrigerator and are not handled again until they are taken out to be packed in ice for delivery. The temperature of the refrigerator is kept down to zero, thus keeping the cream frozen without ice or salt. In this way all necessity for repacking, paddling or stirring the cream is done away with. This is another great step toward a clean, pure product. The old way of carrying cream with ice and salt necessitated uncovering the cream and paddling two or three times before delivering it to the consumer.

Another great advantage of this freezer is the rapidity with which it freezes. It is rated at one hundred and twenty gallons per hour and freezes easily one hundred and fifty.

The advantages are so great in the saving of time and in the handling of the finished product that this freezer bids fair to take the lead in all large ice cream factories. In fact the Creamery Package Company is far behind its orders for the machine, and the company is looking for a location to build a large factory for its manufacture.

Taking these things all into consideration, while The Shurtliff Company is not the very largest ice cream plant in existence, it is one of the most complete and up to date plants in the country, and has taken rank among the foremost of Janesville's industries.

tend to clarify the situation, though both have a negative value in defining what for the present cannot be done.

TIME TO STOP

Within the past two weeks, two trials have been held in the municipal court on an assault-charge. Two juries have heard the testimony, the arguments of the attorneys for the defense and prosecution, and twice have disagreed. It has cost the country, in the neighborhood of one hundred and fifty dollars in court fees and the general public are disgusted. The first time five men thought the defendant not guilty, and on the second trial four were of the same opinion.

ion. Public sentiment does not approve of the waste of public funds to satisfy the cravings of attorneys. From reliable authority it is understood the case could have been settled after the first trial, but an attorney for the prosecution refused to permit it. The Gazette has no ex parte to offer for the alleged assault of the defendant upon the plaintiff. No mitigating circumstances can excuse a younger man hitting an older one, no matter how exasperating and violent he may become, but the dragging of the matter into court through two trials and a third one in prospect, all at the expense of the taxpayers, is not helping the cause of the Humane Society nor the good name of the parties to the action or the good name of the city. It is time to call a halt in such proceedings and the taxpayers who pay the costs of the trials should assert themselves.

WEDDING BELLS CHIME MERRILY

THREE NUPTIAL KNOTS TIED AT ST. PATRICK'S CHURCH.

MASSES AT 6:30, 7:30 AND 8

Three Rock County People Principals in Two Marriages Solemnized at Rockford.

Three weddings occurred in quick succession at St. Patrick's church this morning. Three different priests celebrated nuptial masses at 6:30, 7:30 and 8:00 o'clock.

Glass-McDermott.
The first ceremony, which was performed by Rev. J. E. Harlin of Edgerton, united in marriage Miss Georgia Glass and Michael McDermott, both of this city. Miss Alice McDermott, a niece of the groom, served as bridesmaid and Martin McDermott, a brother of the groom, acted as best man. Miss Glass and her attendant were prettily garbed in creations of white dotted mull. After the wedding a delicious three-course breakfast was served at the home of the bride's parents, 113 Pearl street. Relatives of the contracting parties to the number of sixty were present. The bride, who is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew J. Glass, is a very popular young lady and the groom is a well known and worthy young man employed in the local shops of the Chicago & North-Western railway company. After a wedding trip to Milwaukee and Chicago Mr. and Mrs. McDermott will reside at 353 School street.

Doheny-Delaney.
Dean E. M. McGinnity officiated at 7:30 o'clock at the wedding of Miss Zetta Doheny to Joseph Delaney. The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Anna Doheny and the groom by his brother, Frank Delaney. Miss Doheny wore a beautiful gown of white silk mull and lace and a picture hat and carried bride's roses. A number of guests were from out of the city. They were Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Doheny of Chicago, Mr. and Mrs. G. C. Skinner and daughter of Milwaukee, Miss Ward of the same city, Mrs. Martin Doheny and daughter of Madison, Charles Delaney of Chicago, Henry Delaney of Oshkosh, Patrick Delaney of Fond du Lac, Mr. Carroll and Mr. and Mrs. J. Mullens of Delavan, and Mr. and Mrs. Devine, Mr. and Mrs. Joyce and Mr. Conner of Edgerton. The groom is a local cigar manufacturer and he and his bride have the best wishes of a large circle of friends.

Donahue-Riley.
At eight o'clock Miss Nora Donahue of this city and Eugene J. Riley of Leyden were married by Rev. Fr. McCarthy of Evansville. The groom was attended by his brother, Thomas Riley, and the bride by her sister, Miss Mary Donahue. Miss Donahue is a daughter of Mrs. and Mr. Jeremiah Donahue of Mineral Point Avenue. The young couple's score of friends extend congratulations.

Marriages at Rockford.
Two weddings of interest to Rock county people were celebrated in Rockford this week. Yesterday Miss Sadie Robertson of the town of Ayrton and Harry Gould of Brodhead were united in marriage by Judge Beckow. Monday Miss Sadie Jordan of Janesville became the wife of Joseph Scribner of Chillicothe, Ill.

LARGE "RAIN-DEER" SURPRISED GOLFERS

At Play at the Fourth Hole During the Storm Yesterday Afternoon—Club-Day Festivities.

Arthur P. Burnham and Harry G. Carter came in from the storm and a game on the golf links late yesterday afternoon to relate an experience which severely taxed the credulity of the "porch gallery." According to their narrative they were playing the fourth hole when a large buck deer emerged from cover for an instant in the strip of woodland adjoining Happy Hollow and then bounded away to the westward. The splendid antlers were not even by the excited antlers and the fact that both of the men are careful observers and experienced hunters makes the "brindle-cow, Elk and "rain-deer" theories untenable. City Marshal Appleby is authority for the statement that a creature answering to the description escaped from the premises of Charles Still in Deloit two years ago and was last seen, at Afton.

Rain interfered with the match play and the attendance at the club supper, there being only a few more than a score present at the festive board. The clearing of the sky, however, brought out a number in the evening and the dance to the music of the Carter & Benker orchestra proved very enjoyable.

Among the out of town guests were Miss Frances Butterfield of Moscow, Idaho, and Miss Lucile Budd of San Francisco, Cal.

Players will have until next Monday to hand in their qualifying scores for the Wilson Lane cup (for men) and the Valentine medal (for ladies). The first round of match play for both trophies will be held on Tuesday.

BAILEY TUMULI MOUNDS AND ANCIENT CORNFIELD—(From notes made by H. L. Skavlem on March 10, 1907)—In the southwest corner of the NE 1/4 of Section 1, under the bluff of the high prairie lands which extend into Section 1 from the southwest, there is still left a strip of woodland—locally known as the "Bailey woods." In these woods, extending north of the railroad track and down the gentle slope, there are still to be seen—here and there, isolated patches of the Indian cornfields abandoned in the early days of the last century. The land has never been disturbed, except by pasturing, so the little hillocks in which the Indians planted their corn a hundred years ago, may still be located quite distinctly in places. Dr. J. W. St. John says that when the first settlers came in 1830 some of the cornfields were still standing in the hills.

On the level plain of bottom-land, as it was called in early days, about 40 rods north of the southeast corner of the SE 1/4 of the NW 1/4 of Section 1, and just south of Eastern avenue about ten paces west of the point where that thoroughfare crosses the north and south center line of the section, are the remains of three tumuli, still quite distinguishable, though much leveled by long cultivation. Dr. J. W. St. John remembers these as nice, well rounded mounds—the largest perhaps 25 feet in diameter and 5 to 6 feet high, and the other two considerably smaller. Harry Pierce also described these mounds and the Indian garden, from recollections of half a century ago, so accurately that they were easily located by the writer. The largest mound was opened years ago and some relics are reported to have been secured. What they were I have not been able to ascertain. Mound No. 1 is located close to the corner of the fence and is perhaps one foot high in the center. Nos. 2 and 3 are almost obliterated. No. 2 is located 20 paces to the south of No. 1, and No. 3 is about the same distance from No. 2.

Where History Begins

Years, possibly generations, succeeded the events narrated in the story before the race of men afterwards known as the Chippewas or Ojibways came out of the northeast to found an empire in the Lake Superior basin; before wandering tribes of the Pottawatomies or Fire-Makers, a group which had seceded from the Ojibways to make fires for themselves, crept across Lake Michigan to the islands of Green Bay, thence to the peninsula, and thence down the entire shoreline of what is now Wisconsin, encroaching on the territory of older occupants and making their homes as far inland as the banks of the Lake Koshkonong and Lake Geneva; before very considerable numbers of the main body of the Sioux or Dakota family, to which the Winnebagoes were related, pushed in from the westward to war with their kindred as well as with the Mascoutins, or Fire Nation, who dwelt on the Fox river above Winnebago Lake and whose territory ran southeasterly as far as the present site of Chicago.

Odd Debut of Nicolet

It was to find these Sioux that Jean Nicolet, the first of the French explorers to penetrate this then unknown country, left Quebec in 1634 and after coasting along the southern shore of Lake Huron to Lake Superior, made his way southward to Lake Michigan, paddling across Green Bay to the mouth of the river which now forms the northern boundary line of this state. According to the chronicles he had been told by the Indian tribes, collectively termed Algonquins; a French contraction of Algonquian signifying those on the other side of the river, i. e., the St. Lawrence river; who dwell in the valleys of the Ottawa and of the northern tributaries of the St. Lawrence, that 400 miles to the westward was a people that had formerly lived near a distant sea and were called on that account, by the Algonquins, "Tribe of Men of the Sea"—"Ouinipigon" from "Ouinipig," bad-smelling water, as salt water was by them designated—and that this tribe held intercourse with another tribe living still further west, who reached them by crossing a vast extent of water and who because of their lack of beards, shaved heads, and costumes, seemed to resemble Tartars or Chinese. Nearly one hundred and fifty years after Columbus, explorers of this continent were still looking for a short route to China and it was not difficult for Nicolet to jump to the conclusion that the so-called "vast extent of water" (in reality the Mississippi) was a narrow sea separating America from Asia. Accordingly, after treating with the "Ouinipigonians" (Menominees) whom he met at the mouth of the river of the same name, and proceeding to a village of the "Ouinipigon" (Winnebagoes) on the Fox river where some of the "Nadowessing" (Sioux) were to be seen, he donned a gorgeous garment of China damask, expecting to see Chinese mandarins come forth to meet him. After this disappointment, it is recorded that Nicolet proceeded up the Fox river to a village of the Mascoutins in what is now Green Lake county, departing thence southward for the country of the Illinois (from "Illini," meaning man, the plural of which was changed by the French to "ois") which included what is now Illinois and adjacent parts of Wisconsin, Iowa, and Missouri. At this time, therefore, the Illinois had crowded in from the southward to dispute possession of Rock county with the Winnebagoes, and possibly Pottawatomies, who dwelt about Lake Koshkonong.

Pottawatomies in Wisconsin

Nicolet appears to have had no dealings with this last named tribe but when, in 1659, Radisson and Groselliers, French adventurers who were variously in the service of King Charles II. of England and Louis XIV. of France, started out to traverse much the same territory they were met at a village of the Ottawas ("Nation of Ye Stairing Haires") on the Great Manitoulin island in Lake Huron, by ambassadors from the "Fire-Makers," who guided them to their villages on the islands at the mouth of Green Bay and also on the mainland to the southward. Subsequently these voyageurs sojourned with the Mascoutins, whom Nicolet had discovered, and were told by the latter of a wandering tribe of Christians who lived on the shores of Hudson's Bay in the summer time, and in Wisconsin and along the south shore of the Fresh Sea (Lake Superior) during the winter season. These Christians were allies of the Mascoutins in their wars with the Sioux.

200 Years' War

Five years before this time the Iroquois, members of the most permanent and powerful of the savage governments found in America by the first colonists (a confederacy including the Mohawks, Oneidas, Onondagas, Cayugas, Senecas, and many others afterwards the Tuscaroras) who had planted themselves in western New York and along the shores of Lake Ontario and Lake Erie where they were surrounded by the tribes of Algonquin stock, had driven a large party of Hurons (Wyandots) and Ottawas into Wisconsin. These fugitives had first settled on an island in the Mississippi above Lake Pepin but had subsequently proceeded up the Chippewa river to its source. And almost simultaneously the 200 years' war between the Ojibways and the "Folles Avoines" (Wild Rice Eaters) at the mouth of the Menominee river had broken out. The Ojibways had four villages on the upper course of the stream and the outbreak of hostilities occurred when the Menominees placed obstructions at the river's mouth to prevent the sturgeon from going up. Allied with the Wild-Rice Eaters were the Sioux, the Pottawatomies, the Kickapoos, the Winnebagoes, Shawnees, Ojibways, and Wabankas.

Passing of the Fire Nation

Between 1675 and 1690 the Mascoutins and their kindred, the Kickapoos and the Miami moved first to the Rock river valley and then to the south end of Lake Michigan. The Miami settled eventually about the St. Joseph river in southern Michigan. The Shawnees, an offshoot of the Kickapoos, also moved eastward and were driven to the banks of the Cumberland river, thence into South Carolina and Florida, moving northward again to Ohio after many years of wandering.

Sacs and Foxes Driven Out

The Sacs or "Osagi" (people at the mouth of the river) anciently lived at the junction of the Ottawa and the St. Lawrence in Ontario but were driven by the Iroquois to settle in northern Wisconsin, near Green Bay. The Foxes (called "Outagami"—people on the opposite side of the river—by the Ojibways, and "Renards" by the French) occupied northern Wisconsin and upper Michigan when first known to the white man. By the Ojibways and the French they were forced south of the Wisconsin river where they became incorporated with the Winnebagoes. Subsequently, in 1755, the Winnebagoes and Menominees made war and drove the combined tribes down the Wisconsin river to its confluence with the Mississippi. They in turn vanquished the Illinois, whom they found in the region to the southward, and a large portion of the confederated tribes were located at the mouth of the Rock river until just prior to the Blackhawk War in 1832.

Object Lesson That Failed

By virtue of a land deal with the Winnebagoes and Menominees in 1821, the Oneidas, members of the once powerful confederacy of Six Nations, were moved from New York to Wisconsin. They had become an agricultural people and lived in houses; and it was hoped that a good example, by their example, a good influence on the hunters—the Winnebagoes and Menominees—would be exerted. They were called by the Ojibways "Wapankas," they were called by old Chief Four-Legs of the Winnebagoes. The hope was never realized. The Winnebagoes in 1832 ceded all their lands in Wisconsin and moved west of the Mississippi.

Winnebagoes in 19th Century

In 1820 the Winnebagoes were living in five villages on Winnebago Lake and fourteen on Lake Koshkonong and Rock river. Large pieces of limestone which were turned red by the ancient fires and bits of broken pottery, scattered over the fields offer sufficient evidence that nearly every available foot of frontage on Lake Koshkonong was at one time occupied as a village site. White Crow's bark village was located on Caragong (Lieser) Point at the time the Sacs and Foxes returned to Wisconsin with the United States army in pursuit, and another called "Tay-hee-dah," also on the west bank, near where the river emerges from the lake, was deserted but a few years before. As late as 1831 Man. Bader's settlement on the east side was occupied. There was another village on the west side of the stream near the mouth of the Catfish and the remains of the old cornfields near the Bailey homestead, as well as the burial mounds, show that the wigwags of the Winnebagoes as well as those of their contemporaries, the Illinois, the Miami, the Pottawatomies, the Mascoutins, and the Kickapoos, were set up within the present environs of Janesville. Near the confluence of Turtle Creek and the Rock river, Beloit was located the Winnebago village known to the first white settlers as "The Turtle." This village was perhaps a century old and was occupied until 1829.

Indian Development Checked

That the race of people who constructed the Intaglio (hollowed out of the soil instead of raised, above it) lizard effigy on the C. E. Teller premises 1 1/2 miles below Ft. Atkinson, who reared the remarkable Mam Mound 4 1/2 miles northeast of Baraboo, who carved and drew their stories of the hunt in the LaCrosse valley pictograph cave (in the town of Barre four miles from West Salem), who raised the strange serpent mounds in Adams county, Ohio, and in Canada, not far from Toronto, designed the Janesville tadpole effigy, is scarcely a matter of speculation. The claim is made, with considerable show of authority, that before the European invasion the American tribes had reached a state of quasi-equilibrium and were sedentary to the extent that their territories were recognized and limits substantially defined. Agriculture had commenced and was spreading, though it had nowhere sufficed to entirely replace hunting. Just as the Caucasian races struggled through ages of darkness, there was a chance that, without interference, the copper-colored peoples of North America, progressing from mound-building to architecture and from hieroglyphics to letters, might have attained a high degree of civilization, as the Aztecs in Mexico had done before them. The "Six Nations," indeed, had progressed far enough in their remarkable confederacy and application of the theory of representative government to give woman a voice in their councils. The Ojibways at their old capital, Chegoimegon—called by the French "LaPointe"—near the west end of Lake Superior, were governed by a line of noble rulers beginning with Gitchee Waishkee, the Mighty, and paid poetic devotion to the "north-easter"—the home-blowing wind. The Menominees wrote pictographic scores of their songs, while the Winnebagoes had open squares for "fetes and games and handed down their great calendar and death hymns from generation to generation. The coming of the French and English to dispute for their territory set kinsman against kinsman and made nomads of them all.

Signal Mound Quite Recent

That the so-called "signal mound" was built at a much later period for the distinctly utilitarian purpose of flashing flame signals—perhaps to the Turtle villages or the settlement on the Catfish—as well as for the council fires of the rulers also seems probable. There is evidence to show that the burial mounds, for instance, were built by a people who knew or cared nothing concerning the history and sacred character of the effigies. Such a mound, therefore, of one of the great bird effigies at Lake Koshkonong, Mr. Skavlem came upon a round tumulus containing human bones, the only instance to his certain knowledge where one of these structures was used for sepulture.

Three Great Races

By reason of the continuity of their known occupation of this region which exceeds that of any other race, the effigy mounds are attributed by some to the Sioux or Dakota family, which included the Dacotahs ("Al-lies") of the Missouri basin; the "Hole" of Rebels who left the confederacy in 1600 and settled in the Assiniboine basin (Assinibons—"boiling meat by heated stones"—hence "Stone Indians"); the Winnebagoes who were the parent stock of the Omahas, Iowas, Sagas, and others; and the crows. Two other great races, apparently as distinct in many of their characteristics as the Aryan and Scythian linguistic stocks, played a large part in the history of Wisconsin. The Algonquins occupied an area greater than any other in North America, and of it the Ojibways were the type. They were in high favor with the French who accepted—or translated their names for nearly all of the other tribes as well as geographical localities. Rock river, for instance is a translation of the French "Riviere de la Roche" based on the Algonquin "Sin-sip." The Winnebagoes called it "We-ro-sha-na-gra." To this race belonged the Sacs and Foxes, the Menominees, Ottawas, Illinois, Pottawatomies, Mascoutins, Kickapoos, Shawnees and Miami. The Wyandots or Iroquois family was allied ethnically to the Algonquins and linguistically (remotely) to the Dacotahs. The only obstacle in the way of accepting the Winnebagoes as the "Mound-Builders" is the fact that the modern descendants are able to shed no light whatever on these riddles of the past.

Henry W. Furniss.

Hon. Henry W. Furniss, minister plenipotentiary from the United States to Haiti since November 23, 1905, was born at Brooklyn, N. Y., about 30 years ago, but his home has been in Indianapolis for the past 30 years, where he was educated in the grammar and high schools. He studied medicine, and from 1895 until 1896 was a surgeon in Freedmen's hospital in Washington, D. C. He then returned to his home in Indianapolis. In 1899 he entered the census office at Washington and made schedules of financial transactions, bonded and other indebtedness, state and national, and summarized the laws relating to these intricate fiscal affairs. He was made consul at Bahia, Brazil, on January 14, 1898, where he remained until given his present post in Haiti.

There was a look in her superb eyes which told me that it would have been to her infinite pleasure to run a sword through my black and villainous heart. Presently I recovered. With forced calm I stooped and collected my gloves and crop.

"Your highness, what the deuce has the duke to do with my affairs, or I with his? As an American, you would scarcely expect me to meddle with your private affairs. You are the last person in the world I thought to meet this night. I represent the United States in this country, and though I am inordinately young, I have acquired the habit of attending to my own affairs."

From the angry face in front of me I turned to the dismayed face beyond.

There must have been a question in my glance. The young woman drew herself up proudly.

"I am the Honorable Betty Moore." (The princess' schoolmate in England.)

Her highness stood biting the knuckle of a forefinger, undecided as to what path of action to enter, to reach a satisfactory end. My very rudeness convinced her more than anything else that I spoke the truth.

"How, then, did you select this particular road?"—still entertaining some doubt.

"It is a highway, free to all. But I have already explained that. I answered quietly. I moved deliberately toward the door, but with a cat-like movement she sprang in front of me.

"Well, your highness."

"Wait!" she commanded, extending an authoritative arm (lovely, too!). "Since you are here, and since you know who I am, you must remain."

"Must?" I repeated, taken aback.

"Must! My presence here ought not to be known to any one. When you witness that which shall take place here to-night, you will understand. Her tone lost its evenness; it trembled and became a bit wild.

"Desire," she corrected, the old fire in her eyes.

"Thank you. I desire, then, to know the full reason; for I can not be a party to anything which may reflect upon the consulate. For myself, I do not care. What hare-brained escapade was now in the air?"

The princess walked over to the mantel and rested her arms upon it, staring wide-eyed into the fire. Say-eral minutes passed. I waited patiently; but, to tell the truth, I was on fire with curiosity. At length my patience was rewarded.

"You have heard that I am to marry the Prince of Doppelkinn?" she began. I nodded.

"Doubtless you have also heard of my determination not to marry him?" she went on.

Again I nodded.

"Well, I am not going to marry him."

I was seized with the desire to laugh but dared not. What had all this to do with my detention in the castle?

"Betty," said the princess, turning imploringly to her companion (what a change!), "you tell him."

"I?" The Honorable Betty drew back.

(Had they kidnapped old Doppelkinn? I wondered.)

"I can not tell him," cried her highness miserably. "I simply can not. You must do it, Betty. It is now absolutely necessary that he should know everything; it is absolutely vital that he be present. Perhaps heaven has sent him. Do you understand? Now, tell him!"

And, wonders to behold! she who but a few minutes gone had been a princess in everything, cold, seeing, tranquil, she fled from the room. (Decidedly this was growing interesting. What had they done?) Thus, the Honorable Betty Moore and his excellency, the American consul at Barscheit, were left staring into each other's eyes fully a minute.

"If in plying it I am asked to do nothing to discredit my office, I am not an independent individual,"—smiling to put her more at ease. (I haven't the least doubt that I would have committed any sort of folly had she required it of me.)

"You have my word, sir, that you will be asked to do nothing dishonorable. On the other hand, you will confer a great favor upon her highness, who is in deep trouble and is seeking a way to escape it."

"Command me," said I promptly.

"Her highness is being forced into marriage with a man who is old enough to be her grandfather. She holds him in horror, and will go to any length to make this marriage an impossibility. For my part, I have tried to convince her of the utility of resisting her royal uncle's will. (Sensible little Britisher!) "What she is about to do will be known only to four persons, one of whom is a downright rascal."

"A rascal?" slipped my lips, half-unconsciously. "I trust that I haven't given you that impression," I added eagerly. (A rascal? The plot was thickening to formidable opaqueness.)

"No, no!" she cried hastily, with a flash of summer on her lips. (What is more charming than an English woman with a clear sense of the humorous?) "You haven't given me that impression at all."

"Thank you. My vanity expanded under the genial warmth of this knowledge. It was quite possible that she looked upon me favorably.

"To proceed. There is to be a kind of mock marriage here to-night, and you are to witness it." She watched me sharply.

"I frowned.

"Patience! Not literally a mock marriage but the filling out of a bogus certificate."

"I do not understand at all."

"You have heard of Hermann Steinbock, a cashieler officer?"

"Yes, I understand that he is the rascal to whom you refer."

"Well, this certificate is to be filled out completely. To outwit the duke, her highness commits—"

"A forgery."

"It is a terrible thing to do, but she has gone too far to withdraw now. She is to become the wife of Hermann Steinbock. She wishes to show the certificate to the duke."

"But the banns have not been made public."

"That does not matter."

"But why detain me?" I was growing restless. It was all folly, and no good would come of it.

"It is necessary that a gentleman should be present. The caretaker is not a gentleman. I have said that Steinbock is a rascal. As I review the events, I begin to look upon your arrival as timely. Steinbock is not a reliable quantity."

"I begin to perceive."

"He is to receive 1,000 crowns for his part in the ceremony; then he is to leave the country."

"But the priest's signature, the notary's seal, the iron-clad formalities which attend all these things!" I stammered.

"You will recollect that her highness is a princess of the blood. Scoldom is she refused anything in Barscheit." She went to a small secretary and produced a certificate, duly sealed and signed. There lacked nothing but Steinbock's name.

"But the rascal will boast about it! He may blackmail all of you. He may convince the public that he has really married her highness."

"I think not. We have not moved in this blindly. Steinbock we know to have forged the name of the minister of finance. We hold this sword above his head. And if he should boast or

There must have been a question in my glance. The young woman drew herself up proudly.

"I am the Honorable Betty Moore." (The princess' schoolmate in England.)

Her highness stood biting the knuckle of a forefinger, undecided as to what path of action to enter, to reach a satisfactory end. My very rudeness convinced her more than anything else that I spoke the truth.

"How, then, did you select this particular road?"—still entertaining some doubt.

"It is a highway, free to all. But I have already explained that. I answered quietly. I moved deliberately toward the door, but with a cat-like movement she sprang in front of me.

"Well, your highness."

"Wait!" she commanded, extending an authoritative arm (lovely, too!). "Since you are here, and since you know who I am, you must remain."

"Must?" I repeated, taken aback.

"Must! My presence here ought not to be known to any one. When you witness that which shall take place here to-night, you will understand. Her tone lost its evenness; it trembled and became a bit wild.

"Desire," she corrected, the old fire in her eyes.

"Thank you. I desire, then, to know the full reason; for I can not be a party to anything which may reflect upon the consulate. For myself, I do not care. What hare-brained escapade was now in the air?"

The princess walked over to the mantel and rested her arms upon it, staring wide-eyed into the fire. Say-greater weight than his. Do you understand now?

"Yes, I understand. But I believe that I am genuinely sorry to have blundered into this castle to-night."

"Oh, if you lack courage!" carelessly.

I laughed. "I am not afraid of 20 Steinbocks."

Her laughter echoed mine. "Come, Mr. — By the way, I believe I do not know your name."

"Warrington—Arthur Warrington."

"That is a very good English name, and a gentleman possessing it will never leave two women in a predicament like this. You will understand that we dare not trust any one at court. Relative to her highness, the duke succeeds in bribing all."

"But a rascal like Steinbock!"

"I know,"—a bit wearily.

"It is pardonable to say that I believe her highness has been very foolish."

The girl made a gesture which conceded the fact. "It is too late to retreat, as I have told you. Steinbock is already on the way. We must trust him. But you?"

"After all, what does a consulate amount to?"
